ACCIDENTAL IS COURT FINDING

NO NEGLIGENCE IN DEATH OF VICTOR HILTZ, LUNENBURG MAGISTRATES RULES.

No negligence entered into the death of Victor Hiltz, Lunenburg, member of the crew of the trawler, Viernoe who died at sea on March 10. This was the decision of Stipendiary Magistrate Barnhill in the police court at Halifax following an official inquiry. Hiltz was struck by a broken chain which whipped his face and chest, the evidence showed, and his death was accidental, the Magistrate ruled.

Capt. L. Thorlaksson, master of the trawler, although not an actual eye witness to the tragedy, explained to the Magistrate that Hiltz was in charge of the piece of equipment used to haul in the nets. The chain, about seven feet long, always carried a terrific strain while the nets were being carried in. The chain snapped and struck Hiltz. The captain said the chain had not appeared weak. Eals Hiltz, a cousin of the dead man, also testified, along with William Matthews, another member of the crew, both of whom were near the scene of the accident. These were the only witnesses examined.

Halifax Fish News

Trawlers Viernoe, Capt. Thorlaksson, arrived from the banks yesterday with about 180,000 pounds of fish for the National Fish Company.

LUNENBURG FLEET OFF ON VOYAGE

The Lunenburg fishing fleet, which has been waiting since last Monday for a favorable chance, practically all sailed Wednesday for the Banks on the frozen baiting trip.

About 15 vessels are making the trip this year. In 1932 owing to unfavorable market conditions, the fishing fleet only made two trips, the Spring and summer, neither of which were successful, and the majority of the vessels at the end of the season were in debt. This number starting off early on a frozen baiting trip gives a very optimistic aspect to the industry.

Provides Work.

This fleet also helps out the unemployment situation, as at the close of the 1932 season, it was considered doubtful whether any of the fishing fleet would operate in 1933, which would have been disastrous to Lunenburg. Besides the frozen baiting fleet, there will be 10 or more vessels going on the spring and summer trips, so that the fleet this season will number as many as last. A number of vessels were sold, but several that were not fishing last year, have changed ownership, and are going to operate again this year. The vessels sailed direct to the western Banks, having taken frozen bait at Lunenburg. — Yarmouth Telegram.
